

Tributes To Memory Of Mrs. Rose Hunter

The following tributes to the memory of Mrs. Rose Hunter, whose funeral services were held Tuesday, Jan. 1, were given by Mrs. E. Crane Watson and John M. Bladen:

It was so late when I learned that I was requested to contribute to these services that I feel I cannot satisfy myself, yet my regard, and sympathy for the immediate family would not permit me to decline altogether.

I believe that we who were not privileged to become intimately acquainted with sister Rose Hunter have missed an inspiration that would bring joy in our hearts, her casual meetings her cordial greetings have shed rays of light and cheer, brightening the pathway of every-day life for many of us, warm hearted, generous and hospitable. Her passing will be most keenly felt particularly by her husband and those of the children who have not yet launched in individual careers apart from the old roof-tree. Home cannot be just the same without her adjustments may be made. How beautifully praise worthy it is of the sister, Mrs. Jane Burt, as soon as she learned of sister Hunter's passing, left her occupation in Salt Lake City and came to the afflicted bedside, nursed and cared for her most devotedly. what a comfort and peace it must have been to both, to be so closely associated through the trials of suffering and the final expiration. Though her presence is no longer here that sisterly union and love will continue to be an endeavor-benediction.

Sister Hunter had been active in several of our organizations, and for many years was historian for the Central Camp of the Daughters of the Utah Pioneers, but her greatest, most valued mission has been with her family and her home. Her ambition was to create harmony and happiness in her dear ones. Any gift or talent shown in either of her children was cultivated, she often being the instructor. Groups of friends or neighbors calling unexpectedly would be entertained as though a special program had been planned. Obedient to that mother's suggestions, each would gladly respond with vocal or instrumental music, readings, plays, or dances, she herself as active and interesting conjointly or otherwise. Such lessons must be stamped for good upon the memories of each of that family group. She desired that each should keep true to faith and respond in active service whenever needed.

To bury the dead, but the immortal spirit, that spark of divinity, lives forever. A completed earth life has been transferred from this world to a more perfect sphere. All knowledge and all ideals realized here will with sister Hunter's intensified through eternity.

We could push ajar the gates of life,
Stand within and all God's workings see,
We could interpret all this doubt and strife
For each mystery find a key.
Not today, then be content dear hearts,
Plans like lillies pure and white unfold,
Must not tear the close-shut leaves apart,
We will reveal the calyzed of gold.
If through right living we reach the land
Our tired feet with sandals loose may rest.
And we shall know and clearly understand,
Think that we shall say 'God knew the best.'

E. CRANE WATSON.

Someone like you who's the same today and tomorrow,
Someone as a rock and square as a die;
Someone who's steadfast in joy or sorrow,
Someone who's dearer each day that passes by;
Someone who is fickle and hope is deceiving;
Someone whose leadership ends and life changes all through;
Someone whose only one thread that runs

through the weaving;
Fair to us, square to us—someone like you.

JOHN M. BLADEN.
