

OUR FIRST VICTIM OF INFLUENZA

Mrs. George Foster Succumbs to Pneumonia Resulting from the Plague This Morning.

This morning the first death occurred in this city as a result of the influenza epidemic, which is sweeping the country. The victim is Mrs. Uranna Jones Foster, wife of Mr. George Foster, who has been nursed at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Jones. Deceased leaves a husband and little motherless child, besides parents, and several brothers and sisters, to mourn her untimely end.

The death comes as a rude awakening to the people of this place, who on account of the apparently mild form of the epidemic here have perhaps failed to sense its full seriousness. At the same time every precaution, seemingly, is being taken to prevent its spread. Practically everyone about town is wearing masks, clerks and other employees of business houses are masked, and persons entering or doing business therein are required to wear masks. All cases have been quarantined and isolated as far as possible, and it was hoped that the epidemic had been gotten well in hand. However, a few new cases have been developing, and some have assumed a much more serious form than those heretofore reported. This morning it is reported that Dr. Macfarlane, himself, is ill with what appears suspiciously like influenza, and that he has wired to American Fork for Dr. Clark to come and take care of his practice. Dr. Clark is expected to arrive to-day.

Mrs. Joseph Foster and three children are ill at their farm, Mr. Foster being the only one not afflicted, so far with the disease. The baby has pneumonia and is in a critical condition. Some of the girls and women who have recovered from the disease or have reason to believe that they are otherwise immune, have volunteered their services and are doing all they can for this stricken family, as well as for others similarly situated.

Many of the cases are very mild and require little or no attention, aside from remaining in and avoiding the taking of cold, but one never knows who is going to develop a deadly attack, as so many have done throughout the country. It therefore behooves everyone to use the utmost precaution.

Keep off the streets and at your own homes, if your presence in town is not imperative.

Keep the children at home, unless they are on important errands.

Wear your masks when entering places of business or about congested sections, such as the post office, etc.

Don't knowingly expose yourself or others to the disease. You may have murder on your soul if you do so unnecessarily.
