

YOUNG MATRON PASSES AWAY

—OO—

Monday morning the news was given out that the evening before at about 12 o'clock the spirit of Mrs. Jennie Lunt, wife of H. H. Lunt, had departed on its flight to its Father in Heaven.

Hundreds were stunned, having having been informed that the departed lady had been on a visiting trip to Salt Lake City, and had returned the day before with her husband feeling splendid, much better than when she went north.

Mr. and Mrs. Lunt had arrived from Salt Lake Sunday afternoon, and after meeting relatives who had called to spend a short time with them, they sat chatting in a pleasant strain when suddenly Mrs. Lunt collapsed, and before her husband could do anything for her, her help she expired.

Apoplexy is purported to be the cause of death, and no warning was given of the attack. The passing of his beloved wife left Mr. Lunt bewildered and the agony of grief in his terrible loss was great.

Jennie Lunt was about 36 years of age, and was born and reared in this city. About 12 years ago she was married to H. H. Lunt, and their wedded life had been happy and successful until a few months ago when they lost an infant son which caused a cloud of grief to enter their lives. They were just beginning to find some ease of grief from the untimely death of their loved child, when death stalked in unawares and snatched away one of the most-lovable women that ever lived in this city, depriving her husband of a devoted wife and companion, whose cheerful nature and loyalty had always been an inspiration to him.

Cedar City, by the death of Jennie Lunt, has been bereft of a noble woman, one whose character for integrity stands high, whose loyalty to her relatives and friends was above reproach, and whose great ambition was to do the will of her Father in Heaven, and to rear her children in the paths of righteousness and to be a true wife and help mate to her husband.

It can be truthfully said of Jennie Lunt that she was an ideal wife and mother, and her friends are able to say truthfully: "Think of what a mother should be in the sight of God—such was she."

Funeral services were held in the tabernacle Tuesday afternoon, the building being filled to capacity with relatives, sympathizing friends and acquaintances who had gathered to pay their last tribute of respect to one whom they held in the highest esteem.

The services were opened by the choir singing the anthem "Come Unto Me." Prayer was offered by Elder Solon J. Foster, after which the choir sang "God Moves in a Mysterious Way."

Elder L. W. Jones, a friend of the departed woman from her childhood was the first speaker. He said that he felt that he should be seated with the mourners, as he had come to love Jennie and had felt towards her as though she had been a member of his family. He was pleased to see so many out, which fact attested to the love and respect in which they held her. Sister Jennie was a child of an honored pioneer family, and he was very intimately acquainted with her parents, who were good people and had set a fitting example of honesty for their children to follow. Jennie had followed the examples of her parents and was a woman of very high ideals, and always set good examples of living to those with whom she associated. It had been a credit to him to know her, and he was proud to know that she had made a good record while living, being a good wife and mother, and had done her part in life loyally and willingly. She had a strong belief in the Gospel and had been taught its principles by her parents until they were engrounded in her very deeply.

Miss Alice Higbee rendered an appropriate violin Solo, being accompanied on the piano by Miss Roma Foster.

Elder U. T. Jones was the next speaker. He spoke feelingly of the terrible loss of the husband and children of Sister Lunt. He said we are subject to disease, accident and death. We are all subject to death, but we do not know why. We have been privileged to come to earth to take a body as a home for our spirit to occupy for a time. So long as we obey the laws of God it matters not how long we tarry here. We do not know where we will go after death. It may be that Jennie will be hovering near her husband and children as a guide and monitor, and I believe she is near them now. Elder Jones eulogized the departed for her loyal and pure character, and her goodness as a mother and wife.

Elder J. H. Armstrong was called to the pulpit and said that the death of Sister Lunt had been a distinct shock to him. He had learned to love her dearly. Spoke of her work in the Sunday School and Public schools while a girl and young woman, and how the pupils under her care loved her. He told of how she always worked for goodness, and wanted all to be good and have love for God. He spoke of her great love for her husband and children, and her great sorrow over the loss of her infant child few months ago, and how she wondered what she had done that God should deprive her of her child. Yet she realized that it was God's will, and that "He giveth and Taketh away." The speaker felt that Jennie now was experiencing great joy in the reunion with her beloved child in the spirit world. He quoted several passages of scripture that were encouraging and consoling to the bereaved husband and children.

Elder Wm. R. Palmer then spoke a short time and said it was always hard for him to speak in occasions of this kind and doubly so on this occasion. He had been closely associated with the bereaved husband in church work and business for years and their association had always been congenial. He had learned to consider the bereaved husband a brother and loved him deeply. He had learned to revere his wife who was now departed, and felt to mourn with his brother in his great loss. He told of Jennie's work in the Sunday School, she having worked for years teaching the children the Gospel. He knew her well and had learned to admire her for her noble character and pure life. He quoted several passages from scripture which were an encouragement to those who were called to mourn the passing of a true wife and mother.

The closing song by the choir was "Oh, It is Wonderful," and benediction was pronounced by Elder Herbert Webster.
